What Does Each Function Mean in Percentage in Different Situations?

March 14, 2025

When you receive or just study our test results, you can't help but notice the percentages in block number 4 called "Features of your personality". This block indicates the different stable abilities of different types of thinking. Let's take a look at how these percentages roughly work in reality.

Unconscious perception.

If a function works from 0 to 50 per cent, the person does not evaluate its usefulness.

0% – the mind does not understand the function at all, i.e. does not notice its existence.

1 to 9% – very poorly grasping the meaning of this function, because of this simply ignores the information and its meaning, remains in place and continues the discussion, but already in a different direction.

10 to 19% – does not grasp the meaning of this function well, prefers to transfer information to another topic. In the case of the third setting, there is a slight insecurity. In the case of the eighth setting – there is a small outbreak of aggression.

20 to 30% – sees the point of this function, but prefers to avoid discussions and analyses where the feature works. In the case of the third setting – uncertainty is present. In the case of the eighth setting – medium outburst of aggression is present.

30 to 40% – good at grasping meaning of this function, but it hurts his (her) feelings. In the case of the third setting – there is complete insecurity. In the case of the eighth setting – there is a strong outburst of aggression.

40 to 50% – not present in adequate individuals (so stated in theory).

Conscious perception.

If a function works from 50 per cent and more, the person evaluates the appropriateness and usefulness of this function.

50 to 59% – at the beginning of contact and new event (initial stage) understands others' achievements and information, but is not memorised.

60 to 69% – understands other people's achievements and other people's information in the initial stage and in the middle stage, memorises. But does not bring this matter to the end, does not gain experience. Tries to create his own inventions, but does not succeed well. Also presents information according to this function poorly.

70 to 79% – he (she) brings someone else's business to the end, in which he (she) understands. In other people's information too (all stages are understood), nuances are taken into account. Accordingly, understands the whole situation, that is, the image of a detective, a detective who is talented in other people's inventions and information. Create their inventions and their information at the first stage successfully. But then gets confused, eventually needs someone else's help.

80 to 89% – the personality confidently notices other people's shortcomings and inventions, evaluates the whole situation well and understands to the end. Also in other people's information. Knows how to make own inventions, confidently makes information according to the function, however inventions are not always up to the end correctly made, in own information from time to time some or insignificant mistakes are made or some nuances which the personality has made are omitted.

90 to 100% – talent. The personality itself is able to make professionally inventions from scratch, in fact, innovative and unique. Makes information without the presence of people according to the function. And also understands other people's information and other people's achievements created by the same functions, and memorise. Sees flaws in other people's achievements, makes no mistakes in his own, and takes into account all nuances.

Conclusion.

Atypical types of people rarely reach 90% level in analysing other people's and their own information, hence they have stable misunderstanding with typical people.
